Weather:

High pressure continues out west as warm dry conditions continue across California into next week. Southern California will see another spike in the powerful Santa Ana winds on Thursday (20-35mph) moderating into the weekend. Warm temperatures continue in Central Mexico under a weak high pressure as moisture from the south brings scattered showers to regions to the north. Warm temperatures in the Southwestern Desert region will moderate slightly into next week. A weak cold front moves into Northern Florida with scattered showers and cooler temperatures. Stronger system expected early next week will bring rain to much of the state.

MARKET UPDATES

Apples

Washington is still short on large Granny Smith apples.
